

This is my town Vilnius. There are a lot of beautiful places and buildings. There are also many trees and parks in the city. But there are a few problems here too. Firstly, the air quality in Vilnius is bad enough. There are a lot of not electrical cars that pollute the air. Secondly, homelessness. Since Lithuania is the most drinking nation in the world, there are many homeless people in the country. And thirdly, there's a lot of litters. Scattered rubbish can be found even near the dustbins.

If I were mayor, I would lower prices for electro cars to improve air quality. I would also urge people to ride bicycles or walk more, not to use cars for short distances. To reduce homelessness, I would build more centers helping the homeless people. Centers would distribute food to the homeless, give them lodging. And I would make illegal drinking alcohol on the street. To make my town cleaner, I would ban throwing litter on the streets (even chewing gum). If someone drops something on the ground, he will be fined. I would provide more dustbins. And also, I would pass a law with which all residents who sort garbage will receive a certain amount of money per year.

In my view, the city would become much more positive. Other countries would follow our example. But if I could do only one thing, I would ban throwing litter on the streets, because litter pollutes the environment.
